COLUMBIA COLLEGE CALGARY

PROFESSIONAL BEHAVIOUR

The first two groups of individuals to be recognized as professionals were doctors and lawyers. To become a member of one of these notable groups, in the past, an individual had to be trained (on-the-job) by one or more mentors who were already a member of the profession. Each profession required its new members to adopt a group of professional behaviours. These included such behaviours as abiding by the laws of the land and being honest, moral, and ethical. Members were also expected to help fellow members and to help those outside their profession who sought their service (i.e. patients and clients).

Over the last two hundred years several other groups of individuals adopted similar codes of conduct. In the last fifty years, a large number of leadership, management, business, and professional/personal development books have added both breadth and depth to this group of behaviours. However, rather than describing these behaviours as belonging to a certain group, they ascribe them to 'all individuals' working in an organization from data entry clerk to director. These writers believe such behaviours are essential to the success of each individual in the organization. They further believe these behaviours are essential to the success of the organization itself.

The following list of professional behaviours are drawn from the above sources. They are provided to help ensure that 'all' members of the organization, regardless of their education, position, or title, are aware of the behaviours they should demonstrate as professionals. The more effective each individual demonstrates these behaviours, the more successful they will become as respected and valued professionals within the organization.

Further, the more actively and collaboratively each individual engages with other professionals, within the organization, the more successful the organization will become. And the more success the organization achieves, the more job security each professional will have.
